Origins and Context of the Falling Man

The Photograph's Background

The falling man refers to a photograph taken during the September 11, 2001 terrorist attacks on the World Trade Center in New York City. The image captures an unidentified man falling from the North Tower, moments before impact. The photograph was shot by renowned photojournalist Richard Drew for the Associated Press and has since become one of the most poignant visual representations of that tragic day.

The Event Depicted

During the chaos of the September 11 attacks, many individuals trapped in the Towers faced an impossible choice: stay and perish in the flames or leap to their deaths in desperation. The falling man is believed to be one of these individuals who chose to jump rather than burn alive. The image of him descending through the air encapsulates the horror and despair experienced by victims of the attack.

Origin and Context of "The Falling Man"

The Photographer: Richard Drew

Richard Drew, a seasoned photojournalist working for the Associated Press, captured "The Falling Man" at approximately 9:41 a.m. on September 11, 2001. Drew was among the first photographers on the scene, documenting the chaos at the World Trade Center after the terrorist attacks.

Drew's work during that day produced numerous images, but "The Falling Man" stands out for its stark, unsettling depiction of human despair. It was taken from a distance, with precise framing, capturing a man plummeting from the North Tower's upper floor.

The digital revolution has fundamentally transformed the way people discover, consume, and interact with information.
